2. Summary of the Industry (Source: Infomerics Report)

The fresh fruit industry is an important part of the horticulture sector and covers a wide range of fruits produced and consumed across domestic and international markets. Fresh fruits form an essential part of daily food consumption due to their nutritional value, natural taste and wide acceptance across households, retail markets, food service channels and export markets.

The industry is closely linked to agricultural production and is influenced by factors such as climatic conditions, crop cycles, regional cultivation patterns and availability of suitable varieties. Since all fruits cannot be cultivated across all regions due to differences in climate, soil conditions and seasonality, demand for fresh fruits is supported by regional production diversity and consumer preference for variety. Fruits are an important source of vitamins, minerals, fibre and natural sugars, making them a key component of balanced diets.

Due to their perishable nature, freshness, quality and timely availability remain important characteristics of the industry.

India has a well-established fresh fruit industry supported by its diverse agro-climatic conditions, large cultivation base and year-round production of several fruit crops. The country produces a broad range of fruits catering to both domestic consumption and international markets.

Overall, the fresh fruit industry represents a significant segment of the agricultural economy, with relevance across farming, trade, retail and exports. Its importance is supported by regular consumption, wide product variety, nutritional relevance and India's natural advantage in cultivating fruits across different regions and seasons. For further information, see “Industry Overview” beginning on page 137 of the Draft Red Herring Prospectus.
